Workshop Overview

Join fellow health care professionals for an immersive learning experience that dives beyond the 101 of traditional workshops. Our facilitators will begin with a brief overview of human trafficking crimes and their health connections. You'll then learn about the specific health impacts of trafficking, along with tools for identification and assessment including trauma-informed care principles, barriers to disclosure, screening tools and ways to handle documentation.

In addition, the workshop will cover the provider's role in response and referrals. You'll have the chance to apply your knowledge with peers through exploring case studies, as well as brainstorming policies and procedures that might be implemented in your own setting.

Human Trafficking: A Social and Racial Justice Issue

Our workshop leaders will use a variety of interactive learner-centric teaching and learning methods to engage learners. They seek to help health professionals understand this issue of social and racial justice. While human trafficking crimes ensnare people of all genders, cultures, races and backgrounds, they disproportionately affect people of color, LGBTQI youth and other marginalized groups.

Throughout the training, you'll hear inclusive language and learn methods and processes that will empower you to understand and take into account victims' well-being. You'll also gain skills in assessing people across different backgrounds, inclusive of all skin types and pigments.

“Should be mandatory training for ALL health care workers.”

— Loma Linda workshop attendee, Jan. 2024

Course Objectives

Following this program, you'll be able to:

- Recognize the red flags of human trafficking in a clinical or community setting.
- Apply professional, ethical, caring, trauma-informed and sensitive approaches when working with trafficking victims and survivors.
- Advocate for those who have endured trafficking by assisting them in getting needed services and resources.
- Develop skills in identifying trafficking victims and survivors by knowing what to look for, what questions to ask and how to create a place of safety.
- Understand how health care and community health professionals make decisions in human trafficking cases, and brainstorm ways to make decisions.

Faculty

Samantha L. Calvin, PhD(c), MHI, MBA

An anti-trafficking advocate and leader in Arizona and the United States, Samantha has used through education and training to debunk the myths around human trafficking. She is active in community-focused work and research to understand how the issue of human trafficking is evolving.

Over the past ten years with Arizona State University's (ASU) Edson College of Nursing and Innovation, Samantha developed the Edson Human Trafficking Awareness Program, which she currently oversees. This program focuses on helping health care providers and community members to become more aware of what human trafficking looks like, ask better questions when working with potential victims and survivors, and know what resources to provide. Currently, Samantha is expanding this work to include a program for K-12 educators.

She has also served as a consultant for the U.S. Department of Justice. Samantha regularly speaks at ground rounds, conferences and panels throughout Arizona.

Monique R. Guerrero, M.OL

As senior program manager for the Edson College of Nursing and Health Innovation's Learning Enterprise, Monique works with faculty, instructional designers and external partners in creating non-credit education courses. Her leadership and program management insight has enabled her to support the ongoing success of Edson's clinical lactation program, the development and launch of the Human Trafficking in Health Care program, and other projects.

Monique has a passion for higher education learning and providing opportunities to lifelong learners seeking to better their understanding and achieve personal growth. She attended Arizona State University for undergraduate studies and obtained her master's degree in organizational leadership, with an emphasis in project management, through Northern Arizona University. She is currently pursuing her doctorate in leadership and innovation at ASU.

In support of improving patient care, Arizona State University is jointly accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education (ACCME), the Accreditation Council for Pharmacy Education (ACPE), and the American Nurses Credentialing Center (ANCC) to provide continuing education for the healthcare team.

“The information is very valuable. I have a better understanding of how to assess an individual that may be a victim.”

— Pasadena workshop attendee, Jan. 2024
